I find it difficult to answer the argument of those who urre that so flagrant an offense against the rights of nations as was committed by Maximilian, and such a series of bloody crimes as attended his impous enterprise, deserves something more than that their perpetrator should be dismissed to ease and luxury within the walls of a palace, to be pitied for the rest of his life as a brave and unfortunate man, instead of being shunned as an andacious criminal, but that, on the contrary, he should be subjected to some signal punishment, which should serve as a lesson to future invaders of ineffending republics, and teach the monarchs of the Old World to respect the liberties of the New. This toast was received with the greatest enthusiasm, and when Sofier Romero rose he was greeted with three cheers. He spoke as follows:

GENTLEMEN: It is nearly eight years since I landed in an official capacity on this hospitable shore. Soon afterward I became the representative of my country, or at least of such a portion of it, as believing that they had in the United States a great example to implicit, were eager to give Maxico the same advantage visuality. About that very starting, which produced soon afterward the creat civil war of the United States. This great shock was felt at once in Mexico, in the shape of a European intervention evidently for the purpose of overthrowing the republican institutions existing there. All of you, gentlemen, are quite familiar with what followed here as well as there. It pleased Heaven to crown with success the noble efforts of the patricts and philiatthropists, who, while defending in both countries the independence and integrity of their homes, and the institutions of their choice, were also struggling for the advancement of humanity, and the amelioration of the social contact of humanity, and the amelioration of the social contact of humanity, and the amelioration of the social contact of humanity, and the amelioration of the social contact of humanity, and the amelioration of the social contact of humanity, and the amelioration of the social contact of humanity, and the amelioration of the social contact of humanity, and the amelioration of the social contact of humanity, and the amelioration of the social contact of humanity, and the amelioration of the contact of humanity, and the amelioration of the contact of humanity, and the amelioration of the content of humanity, and the social contact of

He returned to the city of Mexico after having promised to call for a National Congress to decide whether the people desired the Republic or the Empire under him. the people desired the Republic or the Empire under him. On arriving there he found that the national troops were closing their lines and carrying everything before them, and, supposing that he could arrest the advances by taking to the interior all the available forces accumulated in the City of Mexico, he marched to Queretaro. It would be unnecessary to say what happened there Through the want of military ability he allowed our troops to concentrate upon and besiege Queretaro, until he was finally overcome. From the tenor of his communications while he was surrounded at Queretaro, it appears very clearly that he never realized the difficulties of his position, and much less the disastrous end of the

But Maximilian, although a Grand Duke and heir of Empire in Austria, was nothing of a Cesar, but only a French automaton in the revolutionary drama of my country. Let his unhappy fate be accepted in extennation of his crime, he consenting to be the automaton of the ambition of the French Cassar in the revolutions of Mexico. Mr. Navarro responded to the seventh toast. He said that, being entirely unprepared, he could make only a few remarks. He then proceeded: Three and a half years ago I had the honor of being invited by some of you to this very place, where you net to express your sympathy for the Mexican Republic, then struggling for her life with one of the most powerful European monarchies. Your own country at that time was also shaken by a gigantic civil war, fomented and applauded by the enemies of republican institutions all over the world. (Applause.) On that occasion the situation of the two Pepublics was identical and so were our convictions. No one of those present doubted for a moment that the glorious cause of the Union would achieve a most complete and splendid trimuph, or that the Republic of Mexico would spring up, as it were, from her own ashes, and he forever free and independent. [Cheers.] Our mutual wishes and conviction, thanks to Heaven, have been fulfilled. Your magnificent country is, and shall be one ["Bravo," and applause], and mine, though weakened and almost exhausted, after so long and bloody a strife, waves to the wind, on the snowy summit of her colossal mountains, the dear old flag, where our nation can read the magical words, "Republic" and "Independence." Under such pleasing circumstances as the present, I feel obliged, as a Mexican, to make mamifest to you, and through you to all your fellow-citizens, my heartfelt gratifued for the unfaltering and efficient moral support given to our cause by both the public officials and citizens of this great Republic. [Cheers.] And for that generous hospitality which, lavished upon every one of us in our bitterest hours, made us forget we were exiles, and hall your beautiful country as our second home. Executive Department, Albany, Sep. 26, 1867.

Dr. J. E. Snodgrass, Commissioner, de.

Dear Sir: Upon the organization of the Board of Managers of the Antietam National Cemetery, I designated Gen. J. B. Van Petten and yourself to ascertain what was reasonably expected of New-York in aid of the patriotic work, and to represent the State at the dedication ceremonies, which were finally arranged to take place on the 17th inst. Your commission having been fulfilled, it is proper that I should express my gratification with the intelligence, idelity, and devotion which have marked the official action of your colleagues and yourself.

You are aware that the last Legislature, in a spirit of patriotic liberality, appropriated $10,000 in aid of the en-place on the 17th 18st. Not combined to desire in good faith its advancement its advancement in the desire in good faith its advancement in the fillilled, it is proper that I should express my gratification properly, and its emancipation from religious into the properly of the combined of the properly of the combined of the combined report will furnish a basis for further action. Your prominent connection with the cause of freedom in Maryland, your steadfast loyalty during the great trial of war, and your interest in the effort to preserve the memory of the fallen, seemed to me to entitle you to the recognition already bestowed, and would justify your designation for the special duty I have mentioned. I therefore regret to hear that your professional engagements interfere to prevent your acceptance of a trust of such importance. Very gruly yours,

Gen. Sheridan, after his Brooklyn reception, resolved to take a quiet night at the village of Flushing. Rumors of his intended visit had circulated in the morning, but before night, all expectation of his arrival had vanushed from the minds of the most enthusiastic. The General took the train at Hunicr's Point at 6j o'clock, which arrived in Flushing long after dark. It soon became known that he was on the train. The passengers at the carse cheered at every station, and on his arrival gave him three times three at the depot. The people of the town were not there, as no one expected him, but it soon became noised about that Gen. Sheridan had arrived and was the guest of Mr. Tucker. The Trustees of the village, who chanced to be in session, passed complimentary resolutions and directed the bells of the town to be rung. A band was procured, and an immense throng of people, headed by the Fire Department, marched to Mr. Tucker's house. They took along tarbarrels and made an immense bontre before the house, and called loudly for the General. He was temporarily at the house of Mr. Draper. On his return the ensist was so great that it was with extreme difficulty that the General made his way into the house. The band played, the people shouted again and again for his appearance. At length the General appeared on the piazza, and, when comparative quiet was restored, L. P. Prince, esq., on behalf of the people, welcomed the General in an impromptu speech. He said that the rund village of Flushing was unused to the ringing of bells, the sound of martial mustc, and such a spectacle as was before him. They could not hope to vie with the magnificent demonstrations which had been made else where; but the people of Flushing, as patriote Americans could, and they did, extend to the galiant Phil. Sheridan a welcome from the heart. They welcomed him as the statesman who knew how to secure the lasting blessings of peace. They welcomed him as the concernment of the people of Flushing, as patriote Americans could, and they did, exten resolved to take a quiet night at the village of Flushing.

The city of anvils and spindles was gaily decked out yesterday, and greeted by the entire population of Paterson—Democrats, Republicans, Conservatives, and all. Sheridan rode through the town to the race course. Nearly every house displayed the Stars and stripes from roof or window, and men, women, and children welcomed the hero of Winchester with a heartiness which must have been very grateful to the gallant soldier. At the races the General vanniy attempted, in his modest way, to avoid recognition. Everybody knew him, and everybody gave him a cordial welcome.

After watching the fine sport on the course, Gen. Sheridan was excorted to the house of Mr. Henry A. Hohis, Division Superintendent of the Eric Railroad, where he was warmly received and hospitably entertained. He was accompanied by Mr. Robert F. Stockton, President of the Delaware and Raritan Conal Company, Mr. Bouker, Master of Transportation of the New-Jersey Railroad, Mr. Tuner of the Eric Railroad, and others. The party next visited Mr. Grant's mansion, and at 9 o'clock the General was publicly received at the Wigwam by the Mayor and Aldermen of Paterson, and greeted by an immense concourse of citizens, among whom were many veteran soldiers. One of these had served under "Lieut." Sheridan in the Mexican war.

The General was escorted to the Wigwam by a number of the veterans, with a band of music. Here the Mayor welcomed him in a brief address, to which Gen. Sheridan replied in his usual laconic style.

Later in the evening he was screnaded by the Army and Navy Veteran Association.

Among the incidents of the evening, after Mr. Woodruff had spoken a policeman of Paterson named Morgan was clearing the platform to make way for Sheridan and the members of his Staff, when Sheridan recognized him as not demarde on the frontier, and instantly called him by name and greeted him as such, although they had not seen each other for years.

SIR: Your communication to THE TRIBUNE, dated Albany, Aug. 12, 1807, and published the lith, entitled. "The Secret History of the Lobby," in its statements preceding the facts furnished by me, has been considered by many persons to reflect personally upon the District Atterney of Albany County. I have been assured by the citizens of that county that the District Attorney is an able and upright officer, and in no war possible has he been, nor can he be influenced by the Covruptionists. I had no personal knowledge prejudicial to that officer at the time I gave you the facts, and so far as I may have been the cause of anything officially. I desire to make an amend as broad as the offense. By giving this equal publicity, you will oblige. Yours trait.
